The front and back covers of the Annual Report show two Honoured Members who were killed in action in the First World War, David Gallaher and Anthony Wilding. They were just two of many New Zealand sports people to die in the war, the centenary of which is now being marked. In addition to Gallaher, twelve other All Blacks died; one national rugby league player was killed at Gallipoli; an Olympian from 1908 and two who played cricket for New Zealand were also killed; another fifteen first-class cricketers also lost their lives.

Chairman's Report

I wrote this report while the Canadian Prime Minister was shown on television responding to events in Parliament Buildings in Ottawa and the shooting of a soldier at the adjacent War Memorial. Stephen Harper was flanked by his country's flag, known the world over as the Maple Leaf. Canada changed its flag 50 years ago and what a success that has been in adding to Canada's national identity.

In New Zealand, Prime Minister John Key has announced his intention to hold a series of referendums about our flag. If the current symbols of the Union Jack and the Southern Cross and the colours of red, blue and white were to disappear, what would we replace them with? Apart from design considerations, this exercise becomes a fundamental exploration of identity.

It is interesting to observe that our current flag was only formally adopted in 1902 though it had been used in various forms since the 1840s. In sport we first saw the use of a black strip and a silver fern 126 years ago in 1888 with the tour of the New Zealand Natives rugby team to Australia and Britain, as well as games in New Zealand before and after. When I think of flags, national identity and sport as a combination I particularly go back to 1995 and the defining moment in the rugby World Cup final in South Africa when President Nelson Mandela saw his World Cup team and the final as vehicles to bring his country together under a new flag and achieve a greater shared purpose in what had been a segregated nation. The impact was tectonic on South Africa.

Sport has an influential role to play in the conversations our prime minister is planning to promote in New Zealand about our flag and the Hall will participate in those activities.

In previous annual reports I have touched on the matter of our national identity and the role sport has played in its formation. I have also had occasion to observe the lack of recognition by Te Papa Tongarewa of the contribution sport has played both in the display and collection of material.

My commentary was in relation to our advocacy on behalf of Honoured Members of the Hall for establishment of a national sports museum ideally under the aegis of Te Papa. It is a fact that the demands on the Hall to become a de facto national sports museum are growing but our resources to respond to those demands are finite and all too modest. The better position is to allow the collections of all our major sports to be housed in one entity and for that entity to enjoy the research and curatorial skills and experience only available within Te Papa.

I am therefore pleased to report that we are finally getting some traction in our advocacy for greater recognition by Te Papa of the role sport has played in the formation of our identity as New Zealanders. Together with Sport New Zealand, whose board and management appear to share our vision for the establishment of a national sports museum, we have recently been in discussions with representatives of Te Papa about how to advance this vision.

It is your Governors' hope that when a national sports museum is established that the Sports Hall of Fame will co-exist in a complementary manner alongside. It is not possible to completely merge any new museum initiative with the Hall but there is no reason why the collections of each may not be displayed together. Indeed, we see that the opportunity to display both collections together plus those, for example, of the New Zealand Olympic Committee and of the Rugby Museum and Cricket Museum and collections from other sports as compelling.

Additionally, the Hall must remain the property and responsibility of its Honoured Members and such activities as the annual induction ceremony are the exclusive preserve of the Hall.

Whatever is the final shape of the process of establishment that now appears to be under way we at the Hall are committed to providing future visitors and in particular the young with an experience that allows them to better understand what it is that contributes to the elements of being a New Zealander as well as displaying and chronicling the feats of our sporting heroes.

Two other initiatives have occurred that are worthy of note. One was the launch at Te Papa of the final section of Te Ara, the Encyclopaedia of New Zealand, a publication many years in the making. The final section covered Creative and Intellectual Life while in an earlier section Sport and Recreation had been added. The irony of a major publication with significant government backing being launched at Te Papa a venue noted for its aridity of collection and display on matters relating to sport was not lost on the Hall.

The second was the launch of the National Sports Museum Online site in the United Kingdom (<http://www.nationalsportsmuseumonline.org.uk>). Its aim is to draw together information about all sporting collections in the United Kingdom, wherever they are held. While this is a private initiative, it does receive some Arts Council England funding. It is an excellent concept and we will watch its progress, particularly in relation to garnering the interest of young people in sport. We will also watch the potential for visitor growth to those museums involved as since the 2012 Olympic Games in London there has been a renaissance in international visitor interest around sports heritage in the United Kingdom. I wonder with a Lions tour of New Zealand in 2017, what those visitors will make of a visit to Te Papa and its treatment of New Zealand's sporting heritage.

The Hall is in the process of identifying sporting collections wherever they might be such as museums, archives, libraries, community venues, libraries, universities, schools and private collectors known to sports organisations. The Hall, as noted in Ron Palenski's report, has modified its operating description to introduce the term "museum" to better allow the process of the collection of information and material.

On behalf of the Honoured Members, I thank Ron and his team for continuing to operate the Hall successfully with a truly modest budget and I acknowledge the contribution from my fellow Governors and in particular those from the south who monitor executive functions of the Hall on a regular basis.

In addition to those Honoured and other Members who died during the past year to whom Ron refers in his report, I acknowledge Sir Tay Wilson, a past long-serving Governor of the Hall who died in Lower Hutt in October 2014.

John Beattie
Chairman

Chief Executive's Report

It is appropriate that the front and back of the Annual Report should feature images of two of our Honoured Members who were killed on active service in the First World War: David Gallaher and Anthony Wilding. The centenary of the start of the war, and other 100-year milestones that will pass in the next four years, serves to remind New Zealanders of the great sacrifices made by all during the war, not just the citizen soldiers who served but those who stayed home as well, enduring from a distance. Singling out men such as Gallaher and Wilding from the thousands of New Zealanders who died should not be seen as putting them on a pedestal beyond others: it was their achievement in sport that did that, not their service in war. Wilding served with a detachment of the (British) Royal Marines and was killed in May 1915. He was New Zealand's most successful tennis player and still ranks sixth among multiple winners at Wimbledon: equal to Australian Rod Laver, ahead of players such as Boris Becker, John McEnroe and Jimmy Connors.

Gallaher was a sergeant in the Auckland Battalion of the New Zealand Expeditionary Force and was killed in the first phase of fighting at Paschendaele in October 1917. It hardly needs to be repeated that he was captain of the first All Black team to tour the northern hemisphere, in 1905-06, and was later an Auckland and New Zealand selector.

The Hall was able to obtain funding from a special government fund set up for war commemorations for banners featuring Wilding and Gallaher.

An interesting insight into the enduring fame of Gallaher is that an Irish film crew visited the Hall during the year while making a documentary about him. Born in Ramelton in northern Ireland, Gallaher seems to be as much a favourite son of Ireland's as he is of New Zealand. Of course, the original of a statue of Gallaher takes pride of place in the Hall's rugby gallery.

The Hall continues to operate as always along shoestring economic lines but remains successful for all of that. It is satisfying to report that for the second year in a row, we were able to record a modest surplus. In the previous year, it was $5818 and this year, $7786. This is thanks to generous grants made by various organisations, especially the New Zealand Community Trust and Pub Charity, and to prudence in expenditure.

In the period under review, I made two separate trips to the National Sports Museum in Melbourne, one of which was funded by the Hall. This museum, which is situated at the Melbourne Cricket Ground, is in effect our equivalent. It benefits from a population at least six times that of New Zealand and a Melbourne population many times that of Dunedin's (and four times larger than Auckland). It benefited in its formative years from a grant of $25 million from the federal government in addition to contributions from the state government and the Melbourne City Council. It is also underpinned by the Melbourne Cricket Club, which owns the MCG, and the Australian Football League, which uses it from April until September. Given all those advantages in Melbourne, our Hall does not suffer by comparison. But it does need more recognition and with greater recognition should come greater financial support. The Prime Minister, John Key, has publicly linked the promotion of sporting activity with the campaign to reduce obesity levels. By educating young people about our sporting past, we can inspire them to try to emulate the champions we honour and thus join in the promotion of a healthy lifestyle which leads to a healthy nation.

Your chairman, John Beattie, reports on progress toward a national sports museum in New Zealand and our desire to be a part of it. We have continued to talk about the idea with Sport New Zealand and, now, the Museum of New Zealand Te Papa Tongarewa.

We continued our valued association with the Halberg Disability Sports Foundation and at its annual dinner in Auckland in February, we were delighted to welcome as Honoured Members Sarah Ulmer and Jonah Lomu. This association gives the Hall national television coverage and during the inductions this year, footage taken in the Hall was shown.

The Hall's board decided during the year that for marketing and display purposes, we could call ourselves the New Zealand Sports Hall of Fame and Museum. The motivation behind this was so we could go beyond exhibiting material only on Honoured Members, though they of course will always remain our focus. Over the years, we have acquired a wide range of sporting memorabilia and the change in title allows us to display some of that. It also meant that we were able to introduce into the Hall a single scull in which Rob Waddell won one of his world titles. He has not yet been inducted – because he had not met the retirement qualification – but he surely will be. In the meantime, one of his boats is in the Hall waiting for him to join it.

We were saddened to record this year the death of one of our Honoured Members, Kevin Skinner, a rugby man of storied memories. Kevin had been a welcome visitor to the Hall on at least two occasions. The Hall extends its utmost sympathy to Kevin's family. This extends of course to all families connected with the Hall who have lost loved ones. We could not operate without the continued assistance of Sport New Zealand and the Dunedin City Council and I thank the various officers in both organisations who support our cause. Our grateful thanks are also due to the various other funders, especially those I have already mentioned, the New Zealand Community Trust and Pub Charity. To them I add the St Kilda Community Trust and the Bendigo Trust for support in the year under review. I know that some commercial providers of services to the Hall, without advice and without fuss, decrease their charges because they like what we do. I can't name them but they know I thank them. I also record the Hall's appreciation of the work done annually and efficiently by our auditors, Cook North & Wong, specifically Malcolm Wong and Jan Clark.

As always, I thank the Board of Governors and especially the chairman, John Beattie, for their continued good work; and likewise the executive committee and its chairman, Stuart McLauchlan. In an increasingly highly professionalised sporting world, their roles are voluntary and appreciated all the more for that.

I thank too those who keep the Hall going from day to day – Kathy Palenski, Helen Watkins and John Spicer. They all work to ensure New Zealand's sporting past continues into the present and the future.

INDEPENDENT AUDITOR'S REPORT

To the readers of the financial statements of New Zealand Sports Hall of Fame Incorporated (the "Society")

Report on the Financial Statements

We have audited the financial statements of the Society, which comprise the Statement of Financial Position as at 30 June 2014, the Statement of Financial Performance and the Statement of Movements in Equity for the year then ended, and a summary of significant accounting policies and other explanatory information.

The Board of Governors' Responsibility for the Financial Statements

The Board of Governors are responsible for the preparation and fair presentation of financial statements in accordance with the accounting policies adopted by New Zealand Sports Hall of Fame Incorporated and for such internal controls as the Board of Governors determine is necessary to enable the preparation of financial statements that are free from material misstatement, whether due to fraud or error.

Auditor's Responsibility

Our responsibility is to express an opinion on these financial statements based on our audit. We conducted our audit in accordance with International Standards on Auditing (New Zealand). These standards require that we comply with relevant ethical requirements and plan and perform the audit to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the financial statements are free from material misstatements.

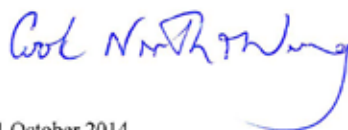

An audit involves performing procedures to obtain audit evidence about the amounts and disclosures in the financial statements. The procedures selected depend on the auditor's judgement, including the assessment of the risks of material misstatements of the financial statements, whether due to fraud or error. In making those risk assessments, the auditor considers internal control relevant to the entity's preparation of financial statements that give a true and fair view of the matters to which they relate in order to design audit procedures that are appropriate in the circumstances, but not for the purpose of expressing an opinion on the effectiveness of the entity's internal control. An audit also includes evaluating the appropriateness of accounting policies used and the reasonableness of accounting estimates, as well as evaluating the overall presentation of the financial statements.

We believe that the audit evidence we have obtained is sufficient and appropriate to provide a basis for our unqualified opinion on the financial position and financial performance.

Other than in our capacity as auditor we have no relationship with or interests in the Society.

Opinion

In our opinion, the financial statements present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of the Society as at 30 June 2014 and its financial performance for the year then ended on that date.
